

Cowboy Up and Help Save Tex Randall! The Canyon Main Street Program is the proud owner of Tex Randall and the land where he is located.

Most people who have lived in the Texas Panhandle or have passed through on US Hwy. 60 remember the impression that Tex Randall, one of the tallest cowboy in Texas made on them. Everyone has a story to tell about Tex whether it was the first time they saw him or as they routinely traveled the highway where he is located – it was a bench mark or mile marker for them.

Tex Randall was constructed at his location in 1959 by industrial arts teacher Harry Wheeler. The statue is composed of concrete, steel and wire mesh. The original purpose was to advertise

Wheeler's Western Store. The last restoration effort for the statue was in 1989 when a truck crashed into Tex's left boot. The aging landmark now resides over a vacant building adjacent to US Highway 60 in Canyon, Texas

The aging cowboy statue is on the endangered roadside attractions list compiled by the Society for Commercial Archeology and released in March of 2010.

The Canyon Main Street Program is a non profit charitable organization founded in 2002. Through your generosity and contributions, Tex Randall will be restored and his surroundings will be developed into an area befitting for the Texas Panhandle Icon.
